

activity. And then it says the amount of money involved in each such business transaction. And finally at a later point he asked for the tax returns of the Attorney General. Instead of a written response the Attorney General answers orally and he says, I will do that, I will do it in the deposition. Take my deposition in December and I will give you that information. In December the deposition was taken and in that deposition there was extensive questioning with regard to business transaction and financial transactions. And on Page 18 of that deposition the question was asked, did you ever specifically bill Mr. Copple...this was Marv Copple, for your counsel on projects other than Fox Hollow and Timber Ridge? And the answer was no. Did you ever give him orally you know a figure or ask for a specific amount of compensation on these projects? Answer, no. How did he pay you for your services on the projects other than Fox Hollow and Timber Ridge, or did he? He never did pay me. He never did pay me. And then the deposition goes on to ask this question with regard to Fox Hollow. With respect to Fox Hollow then, what was the arrangement that you have with Mr. Copple for compensation for your services as counsel? And in long and detailed discussion of that arrangement, the Attorney General explained that they had created some false purchase agreements, that is, the Attorney General and Mr. Galter were to buy these lots under these false purchase agreements but they weren't intended to be real purchase agreements. They were intended to be agreements under which Mr. Galter and Mr. Douglas would get compensation for their services, and they would do that because Marv Copple would then sell those lots and every lot they sold would go Marv Copple, Paul Douglas, to the buyer, and the profit, the difference between what the buyer paid and what Marv Copple paid would be split between Marv Copple and the Attorney General and Paul Galter. That was the compensation arrangement that was described in great detail in this deposition and the Attorney General didn't say one thing more about any other compensation with regard to the Fox Hollow transaction. On February 6th the Attorney General replied to the Domina report and he said. "Although it has not been mentioned in that report, there is one thing I want to disclose. No one has ever asked me whether or not the only payments I received for my services in connection with
